

To break down the Airbnb page layout, I first identified the major sections by using the inspect element tool in the Chrome browser. I examined it from largest to smallest sections. The body serves as the outermost container. Inside it, I identified sections such as the header, nav links, main content grid, and the footer.

After establishing the major sections, I identified the smaller elements within it. The header contains elements like the logo, search bar and profile settings. The nav links act as a secondary navigation for categories and filtering functionalities. The main content grid displays rental listings with images, prices, and descriptions. Lastly, the footer is divided into multiple subsections, the discover more and the main footer.

GitHub repository link:

https://github.com/JosephNeilG/armada-activities/tree/main/css/04_joseph_gapuz_boxes